Knowing history & Site seeing of Important Places at Gour

Gauḍa (also known as Gaur, Gour, Lakhnauti, and Jannatabad) is a historic city of Bengal in the eastern part of the Indian subcontinent, and one of the most prominent capitals of classical and medieval India, being the capital city of Bengal under several kingdoms. The Gauḍa region was also a province of several pan-Indian empires. During the 7th century, the Gauḍa Kingdom was founded by King Shashanka, whose reign corresponds with the beginning of the Bengali calendar. Gauḍa gradually became synonymous with Bengal and Bengalis. It was conquered by Bakhtiyar Khalji, a lieutenant of the Ghurid ruler Muhammad of Ghor in 1203.

For a period of 112 years, between 1453 and 1565, Gauḍa was the capital of the Bengal Sultanate. In 1500, Gauḍa was the fifth-most populous city in the world, with a population of 200,000, as well as one of the most densely populated cities in the Indian subcontinent. The Portuguese left detailed accounts of the city. The Sultans built a citadel, many mosques, a royal palace, canals and bridges. Buildings featured glazed tiles. The city thrived until the collapse of the Bengal Sultanate in the 16th century, when the Mughal Empire took control of the region. When the Mughal Emperor Humayun invaded the region, he renamed the city Jannatabad ("heavenly city"). Most of the surviving structures in Gauḍa are from the period of the Bengal Sultanate. The city was sacked by Sher Shah Suri. An outbreak of the plague contributed to the city's downfall. The course of the Ganges was once located near the city, but a change in the river's course caused Gauḍa to lose its strategic importance. A new Mughal capital developed later in Dhaka. Gauḍa was one of the most prominent capitals in the history of Bengal and the history of the Indian subcontinent, and a centre of stately medieval architecture. Gauḍa's ruins were depicted in the artwork of European painters during the 18th and 19th centuries. Colonial officials, such as Francis Buchanan-Hamilton and William Francklin, left detailed surveys of the former Bengali capital.

Gauḍa is located at 24°52'N 88°08'E. It straddles the Bangladesh-India border, with most of its ruins on the Indian side and a few structures on the Bangladeshi side, it was once one of the most populous cities in the world. The ruins of this former city now straddle the international border and are divided between the Malda district of West Bengal and Chapai Nawabganj District of Rajshahi Division. The Kotwali Gate, formerly part of the citadel, now marks the border checkpoint between the two countries.

Knowing history & Site seeing of Adina Mosque

The Adina Mosque is a former mosque in Malda District, West Bengal, India. It was the largest such structure in the Indian subcontinent and was built during the Bengal Sultanate as a royal mosque by Sikandar Shah, who is also buried inside. The mosque is situated in Pandua, a former royal capital. The vast architecture is associated with the hypostyle of the Umayyad Mosque, which was used during the introduction of Islam in new areas. The early Bengal Sultanate harbored imperial ambitions after having defeated the Delhi Sultanate twice in 1353 and 1359. The Adina Mosque was commissioned in 1373. Its construction reused materials from pre-Islamic Hindu and Buddhist structures. According to the list of Monuments of National Importance in West Bengal (serial no. N-WB-81) Adina Mosque is an ASI listed monument.

The design of the mosque incorporated Bengali, Arab, Persian and Byzantine architecture. Although the mosque is eye-catching from far because of its size, but because of the finely precise executed designed decoration makes it hard to see the characteristics it holds without standing in a good distance from it. It was built with rubble masonry that was covered with brick, stone, and coatings of stucco, plaster, concrete, glazing or lime smoothing. Stone flowers were integrated into the arches of the interior and exterior all around the building. Its plan is similar to the Great Mosque of Damascus. It had a rectangular hypostyle structure with an open courtyard. There were several hundred domes. The structure measured 172 by 97 m. The entire western wall evokes the imperial style of pre-Islamic Sasanian Persia. The mosque's most prominent feature is its monumental ribbed barrel vault over the central nave, the first such huge vault built in the subcontinent, and another feature shared in common with the Sassanian style. The mosque consciously imitated Persianate imperial grandeur. The prayer hall is five aisles deep, while the north, south and east cloisters around the courtyard consist of triple aisles. In total, these aisles had 260 pillars and 387 domed bays. The interior of the courtyard is a continuous façade of 92 arches surmounted by a parapet, beyond which the domes of the bays can be seen. The ornament on the building is simple, but if you look closer you can see the intensity and discipline in the engravings that have been created on the walls and arches. The interior elevated platform, which was the gallery of the Sultan and his officials, still exists. The Sultan's tomb chamber is attached with the western wall.

Important of the Study Tour

As we all the students of History we always hunt for practical knowledge through visiting important places of history like Gour & Adina. This study tour enriched us with so many practical knowledge of Ancient and mediaeval Indian art, architecture and culture. The direct visualization of the places and monuments helped us to grow our inner inquisitiveness to know the more about historical background of that place. This occasionally directed us towards historical research. In this tour, almost we all observed the things from various angles and we shared different ideas about different monuments and places. Particularly, few students showed very keen interest to get additional knowledge from the locals of visiting areas to compare the present socio-economic condition with that of the mediaeval times when all those buildings were constructed. For the first time our students came to know, through direct visualization, the Indo-Islamic & Sasanian pattern of Art and Architecture, the Design and mechanism of Big Dome, the materials and mortars of the buildings, the specific Chajja style of Bengali architecture, the Motifs and floral and zoometric sculptures, the size of Bengali Bricks, the cemeteries of Sahi kings etc. We also came to know the present socio-economic condition of people of those areas. Overall we all satisfied our historical queries and captured so many good moments during the whole journey of our tour. Besides the academic bonding, we, both the teachers and students, developed a kind of family cum eco-friendly bonding among us.
